Re: Scott Paul Davis; RFA No. 26-13570

Dear Hanson:

Your correspondence regarding the above-named attorney has been referred to me for review. The Florida Bar is the licensing agency for all attorneys admitted to practice law in the State of Florida. In cases where discipline is indicated, the disciplinary action is taken against the attorney's licensure, and will not affect or overturn the outcome of any civil proceeding.

In your complaint, you stated, that Mr. Davis has pressed for you to undertake a psychological evaluation but has refused to accept documents you offered to him and has stated that a guardian ad litem should be appointed to examine your records. You also stated that Mr. Davis moved for such an appointment when he filed several motions after your attorney withdrew from your case.

You stated that Mr. Davis conducted an evidentiary hearing during a time when your case was stayed pending the results of an appeal. A review of court records indicates that the appeal was disposed of prior to the hearing mentioned in your complaint.

You stated that Mr. Davis has refused to provide you with his attorney's billing records and other documents you requested through discovery. You stated that you have brought such matters before the Court before, but that the Court declined to take any action in the matter thus far; however, you also stated that there is currently a motion to compel filed by you against Mr. Davis pending before the Court.

These allegations and others upon which your complaint is premised involve a dispute over which a court has jurisdiction. The Supreme Court of Florida has ruled that the disciplinary process is not to be used as a substitute for civil proceedings and remedies. See The Florida Bar v. Della-Donna, 583 So.2d 307 (Fla. 1989). As such, The Florida Bar's grievance system is not the correct forum in which to have your allegations adjudicated, and resolution of those issues must be left to the court of competent jurisdiction. If the court makes a finding or enters an order which supports your allegations against Mr. Davis, you may resubmit your inquiry along with a copy of such findings or order. At that point in time, the Bar would be in a position to further address the issue.

This determination does not preclude you however, from consulting a private attorney and/or exercising any legal remedies which may be available to you.

In light of the foregoing, this file has been closed effective June 16, 2026. Pursuant to the Bar's records retention schedule, the computer record and file of this matter will be disposed of one year from the date of closure.

Sincerely,

Christopher Stephen Wackes, Bar Counsel
