“Narrow the issues” — and an offer to void the agreement for discovery — met with refusal

Through mid-December 2024, Hanson repeatedly tried to narrow the case to the one thing that mattered — court-ordered discovery — and even offered to give up the marital agreement to get it. Davis would not engage.

HANSON — narrowing to the discovery issue

Dec. 16, 2024 — 8:17 AM

We may be able to narrow the issues for what Judge Ayers needs to address . [Hanson asks for mediation dates, the Sarah and Sorgie deposition dates, and that Davis withdraw the discovery objections.]

Dec. 17, 2024 — 7:12 AM

Please confirm for me that Mrs. Hanson is agreeable to withdrawing all discovery objections in exchange for me agreeing that the marital agreement is null and void If not, please provide some explanation ... Mrs. Hanson would be confirming her desire to have more litigation and expense and less money from the divorce if she continues to object.

DAVIS — refuses to engage; reframes Hanson as the problem

Dec. 17, 2024 — 7:45 AM

What I will no longer ‘allow’ is your ongoing attempts to control the narrative regarding this issue. ... I do not owe you any ‘explanations’ for anything. You are an experienced attorney and respectfully, you should know better. ... I will need to address your volume of emails with the Court during the case management conference on Thursday.

Hanson asked only for what the discovery rules already required, and offered to surrender the marital agreement to resolve the dispute. Davis answered none of it — he refused to explain, recast Hanson’s requests as “controlling the narrative,” and pre-positioned a complaint about Hanson’s “volume of emails.”

DELAY INVERSION: The emails Davis asked the Court to curb were Hanson’s specific efforts to move discovery forward. The only thing Hanson ever “delayed” was Davis’s obstruction of the discovery issue.
