Message Body

Good afternoon. I was following up on our discussions below and wanted to mention a couple of other things.

First, my Dad's brother may help him with his issue, so I may not need an accommodation in October. I will let you know when I hear something more in that regard.

Also, I have not heard anything about a date for the psychological evaluation or vocational evaluation you all want me to have. I don't have a problem attending those especially if it puts off bringing the children fully into this horror show.

The main reason I'm emailing is to ask for you to respond on concerns with the kids. Other than you continuing to escalate weaponization of the children, they're really doing amazing. Last night, you talked to [redacted] for 45 minutes. On a gymnastic night, that's simply too long. [redacted] knows that she has leverage right now and enjoys using it, and making things hard for me. Last night was another example of you indulging her. That's not good for her and you have to know that. I wish that you would at least stop or limit things that are clearly not healthy.

Please let me know on the outstanding questions or whatever ones you're willing to address in these discussions on the children. Thank you for your cooperation.

Chris

What?? Please go back and read my email. Perhaps discuss it with Mr. Davis. I'm absolutely willing to discuss these things. I'm not willing to be bullied anymore. If you want to have a productive conversation, please respond to the questions at least regarding the children.

The kids are doing great. I don't see problems with their sleep, health, development, intellect, personalities, dispositions, or anything else. Everyone loves them and they have a big community of people that care for them. The 3/3 thing isn't perfect.

I do have one concern with the kids which I've shared with you mulitple times and each time you told me how wrong I was. The concern is that they are borderline spoiled, not in the sense of their behavior. It's a bit of an entitlement attitude that I'm seeing. It relates to your alienation attempts. You tell both kids, but especially [redacted] whatever she wants to hear. She's never wrong, and nothing is her fault. When she doesn't like hearing, "no" or being corrected about something, the response is generally, "well Mommy says...." and sometimes it comes with a poor attitude for a few seconds or minutes. It's not a huge problem that I see because if I'm wrong about something, I'll correct it. But if my answer remains, they both respect it eventually. It's just concerning because they're not really growing up at times when someone is just telling them what they want to hear instead of the truth. Other than that, I am so grateful that they're just incredible young people growing up surrounded by love and support.

We need to be careful with any changes when they're doing so well. That's why I need some more information. There's a big risk in upsetting these circumstances where they are thriving.

So, please help me understand your concerns. What are these big problems they're having under your care or that you're hearing about etc.?

Your attorney has suddenly gone silent? Is he still representing you? Regardless, I've been asking yall for cooperation on sharing any concerns about the kids since November of 2024. No one has offered any explanation about the concerns, nor why they can't share the concerns. And nearly a year later no response, despite a judge also requesting the info, I can't just accept your conclusions they're having problems without some basis. You have to see how the concerns appear contrived and based on your unscrupulous litigation tactics.

So please, answer whatever questions you can and we will continue to work towards an agreement. Even if you won't share your concerns about the kids welfare, I'll look at any proposals, but please try to understand my position is one based on the current health and wellbeing and concerns over causing harm thru disrupting it.

I look forward to getting more info, but it will not be until late tonight or tomorrow when I'll have time to review. Have a good afternoon.

So you are refusing to establish a more stable custody change for the benefit of the children?

Correct, I do not agree to 50/50 and do not consider it in the children's best interest. However, this last proposal was still close to it until the Court enters its decision.

So you are also refusing to a holiday schedule? I am clearly not agreeable to you having them three Christmases in a row.

Subject: Re: Second Attempt : Proposed New Plan for Time Sharing

It's really sad. I sent that text because I was feeling so hopeless about how you're intentionally creating division between me and the kids and encouraging them to find fault with me and report to you. Your litigation strategy involving weaponization of the kids through baseless, vague complaints, requires you to try and create fault and problems involving me. It's certainly unethical and even actionable, something I'm working hard on now, involving more than a half dozen lawyers that have touched this case. It's obvious and dangerous corruption, and no matter how much yall try to normalize your conduct, it's incredibly problematic and obvious in this case. I will make sure that I exhaust all legal remedies in exposing it and stopping it from ruining other families.

I do not want to retaliate by returning the tactics you're doing with the kids. I remain focused on the sole reason any of this happened - getting the discovery. The kids are doing so well especially in light of what's going on around them that I haven't even explained the basic dispute to either of them. I thought I can sacrifice some time with them temporarily if that eases the conflict and division pushed upon them. However, when I saw your proposal, it hit me that there's no reason to think you'd stop with the alienation attempts. You'd increase them. And obviously I can't have that.

What are your concerns about how the kids are doing? It seems that you're the only one that has a problem despite your efforts to create them with me and the kids. They are delightful, fun, social, active kids who sleep well and do great in school. [redacted] cries maybe once every 3 days, but I can't remember the last time [redacted] cried or was even remotely unhappy. What are the problems you are seeing? Has anyone else seen them?? Do you have notes from teachers, coaches, etc supporting the complaints? pictures? recordings? Anything? Or you want me to just accept your conclusions without evidence? Obviously, you can understand that when you've put us through a year and a half of hell to cover up what logically can only be a massive fraud. I don't understand how you're still not seeing how serious this is.

Perhaps they are spending too much time at your house and you'll agree to something at least temporary where they are spending time with me, and doing so well?

Your proposal below is confusing. It doesn't look like it's actually 50/50? Was that your intent, to take more time with this proposal as well? I will not agree to anything that gives you more than 50/50, ever.

Things aren't perfect. But changing the custody schedule won't help it. Stop this insanity on our family. It would be so easy for you to do. Just share info that you have to know, eventually you're going to have to share. The more you put us through this, the more severe the consequences should be for these tactics that continue to harm our family so much.

If you have other proposals, I'm happy to look at them, but be advised that I demand that we stick with our current agreement unless you come up with some other proposal that's acceptable to me. Nothing that gives me anything less than 50/50 will ever be acceptable.

I'm open to anything that will help the kids. We both know perfectly well what has to happen - just have the courage to get us through it. Please let me know your thoughts or any other proposals you may offer. We'll stick with the current 3/3 until something changes.

Hello,

You mentioned a different schedule in your last text to me. I think the current schedule is not beneficial to the girls and too chaotic for them to adjust. There is too much change with days constantly rotating. Also, it really interrupts their weekends. We each basically get only one full weekend every month, which makes scheduling playdates and fun activities more difficult.

I propose every other weekend with each parent. A weekend defined as Friday midday (b/t noon to 1pm as have been doing) or after school to Monday midday (b/t noon and 1pm) or Monday morning as drop off for school.

To the extent one parent would have two weekends in a row, i.e., a holiday falls on a weekend but also the following weekends would be with parent who has them that holiday, then the weekend should be swapped so that it is two weekends with one parent in a row and two weekends with another parent in a row for that month.

For the weekdays, from Monday night to Thursday night, I proposed the girls stay with me Monday and Tuesday night and then with you Wed night but Thursday night alternates with you having them Wed and Thursdays the Thursdays on the weekends before I have them and I have them on Thursdays the weekend before you have them. To the extent there is a weekend swap, the Thursday would also swap.

Holidays

Mother's Day : Every Year to Mom

Father's Day : Every Year to Dad

Easter : Even Years to Mom / Odd Years to Dad

Memorial Day Weekend: Even Years to Mom / Odd Years to Dad

4th of July : Even Years to Mom / Odd Years to Dad

Labor Day Weekend : Odd Years to Mom / Even Years to Dad

Halloween : Odd Years to Mom / Even Years to Dad

Thanksgiving : Even Years to Mom / Odd Years to Dad

Christas : Odd Years to Mom / Even Years to Dad

New Years Eve : Even Years to Mom / Odd Years to Dad (so if Christmas in 2025 w/ mom, New Years Even 2025 to Dad)
